Are your children building a good foundation?

Osteoporosis? Not what you would expect when you think of your children. But adolescence is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to build bone. The 4 years surrounding puberty are often called a "bone building window" because over 30 % of lifetime bone mass is laid down during those four years. And one of the best ways to promote healthy strong bones is a well balanced diet that includes calcium and vitamin D along with plenty of exercise.

The best prevention starts very early and continues for a lifetime. It is so easy. The same things that reduce your risk of cancer, diabetes and heart attacks also reduce your risk of fractures. It is worth the effort.

November is Osteoporosis Month
